Abstract

Social strategies are organised plans, approaches, and actions developed to address social issues, improve human relationships, promote social development, and enhance the general well-being of individuals and communities. They involve the use of different methods to encourage cooperation, communication, participation, inclusion, and positive social change. Social strategies are important in addressing societal challenges such as poverty, unemployment, inequality, discrimination, insecurity, poor education, and inadequate healthcare. This report examines the meaning, nature, objectives, types, and importance of social strategies in modern society. It also reviews relevant theories and scholarly perspectives on social development and interaction. Furthermore, it discusses the application of social strategies in education, healthcare, community development, government, and organisations. The report identifies major challenges affecting the implementation of social strategies and suggests possible solutions. It concludes that effective social strategies are necessary for promoting peaceful coexistence, social integration, sustainable development, and improved living standards.

Background of the Study

Society consists of individuals and groups who interact with one another through established relationships, institutions, cultures, and social structures. For society to function effectively, there must be appropriate strategies for managing human relationships, resolving conflicts, promoting cooperation, and addressing social problems. These approaches are generally referred to as social strategies. Social strategies are deliberate plans and methods used by individuals, organisations, communities, and governments to achieve specific social objectives. They focus on improving social relationships, encouraging participation, promoting equality, reducing social problems, and creating conditions that support human development. In everyday life, people use social strategies when communicating, negotiating, resolving disagreements, building relationships, and working together to achieve common goals. At the community level, social strategies are used to organise development programmes, promote public awareness, encourage community participation, and address issues affecting people's welfare. In modern society, social strategies have become increasingly important because of rapid population growth, technological advancement, urbanisation, globalisation, and changing social values.

These developments have created new opportunities as well as challenges that require effective social planning and cooperation. For example, governments use social strategies to reduce poverty, improve healthcare, promote education, and address unemployment. Educational institutions use social strategies to encourage teamwork, discipline, inclusion, and positive relationships among students. Non-governmental organisations also employ social strategies to support vulnerable groups and promote community development. In Nigeria, social strategies are particularly important because the country faces various social challenges, including poverty, unemployment, insecurity, ethnic and religious conflicts, educational inequality, and inadequate access to healthcare. Effective social strategies can help address these challenges by encouraging public participation, strengthening institutions, and promoting national unity. Therefore, social strategies are essential tools for achieving social stability, peaceful coexistence, human development, and sustainable progress.

Literature Review

Nature and Characteristics of Social Strategies

Social strategies possess several characteristics that distinguish them from other forms of planning.

i. Goal-Oriented: Social strategies are developed to achieve specific objectives, such as reducing poverty, improving education, or promoting peaceful coexistence.
ii. People-centred: They focus on human needs, relationships, welfare, and the general well-being of society.
iii. Participatory: Effective social strategies encourage individuals and communities to participate in decision-making and development activities.
iv. Flexible: Social strategies can be adjusted to respond to changes in social conditions and emerging challenges.
v. Cooperative: They encourage teamwork, collaboration, and collective responsibility among individuals and institutions.

vi. Problem-Solving: They are designed to identify social challenges and develop practical solutions.
vii. Long-Term Oriented: Many social strategies aim to produce lasting improvements in society rather than temporary solutions.

Objectives of Social Strategies

The major objectives of social strategies include the following:

i. To promote peaceful relationships and cooperation among individuals and groups.
ii. To reduce poverty, inequality, and social exclusion.
iii. To encourage community participation in development programmes.
iv. To improve access to education and healthcare.
v. To promote human rights, justice, and equal opportunities.
vi. To prevent and resolve social conflicts.
vii. To encourage responsible citizenship and social awareness.
viii. To improve the general standard of living.
ix. To strengthen social institutions and community structures.
x. To promote sustainable social and economic development.

Types of Social Strategies

There are different types of social strategies used to achieve social and developmental objectives.

1. Communication Strategies: Communication strategies involve the use of appropriate methods to share information, express ideas, influence attitudes, and encourage positive behaviour.

Examples include:

i. Public awareness campaigns.
ii. Community meetings.
iii. Social media communication.
iv. Educational programmes.
v. Radio and television broadcasts.

Effective communication helps prevent misunderstandings, promote awareness, and encourage cooperation.

2. Community Development Strategies: Community development strategies are approaches used to improve the living conditions of people within a particular community. They involve identifying community needs and encouraging residents to participate in finding solutions.

Examples include:

i. Construction of community facilities.
ii. Youth empowerment programmes.
iii. Community sanitation projects.

iv. Adult literacy programmes.
v. Skills acquisition and vocational training.

These strategies promote self-reliance and collective responsibility.

3. Conflict Resolution Strategies: Conflict resolution strategies are methods used to prevent, manage, and settle disagreements among individuals, groups, or communities.
Examples include:

i. Dialogue and negotiation.
ii. Mediation.
iii. Arbitration.
iv. Peace education.
v. Reconciliation programmes.

These strategies promote understanding, tolerance, and peaceful coexistence.

4. Social Inclusion Strategies: Social inclusion strategies aim to ensure that every individual has equal opportunities to participate in society, regardless of gender, disability, economic background, ethnicity, or social status.
Examples include:

i. Equal access to education.
ii. Disability-friendly facilities.
iii. Gender equality programmes.
iv. Support for disadvantaged communities.
v. Protection of vulnerable groups.

Social inclusion helps reduce discrimination and social inequality.

5. Educational Strategies: Educational social strategies focus on improving learning opportunities and promoting positive relationships within educational institutions.
Examples include:

i. Peer learning.
ii. Group discussions.
iii. Mentorship programmes.
iv. School counselling.
v. Anti-bullying campaigns.

These strategies help create supportive learning environments and improve students' social development.

6. Social Welfare Strategies: Social welfare strategies are designed to improve the living conditions of individuals and families, particularly those facing economic or social difficulties.
Examples include:

i. Financial assistance programmes.
ii. Healthcare support.
iii. Food assistance.
iv. Housing support.

v. Child protection services.
vi. Support for elderly people.

These strategies help reduce hardship and promote social protection.

7. Digital and Social Media Strategies: Digital social strategies involve using technology and online platforms to encourage communication, public participation, education, and social awareness.

Examples include:

i. Online awareness campaigns.
ii. Digital community engagement.
iii. Educational social media programmes.
iv. Online fundraising for social causes.
v. Digital advocacy.

These strategies make it easier to reach large audiences and share information quickly.

Theoretical Perspectives on Social Strategies

Several sociological theories provide explanations for how social strategies operate and influence human behaviour.

i. Functionalist Theory: Functionalist theory views society as a system made up of interconnected institutions that work together to maintain stability and order. Thinkers such as Émile Durkheim emphasised the importance of social institutions, shared values, and social cooperation. From this perspective, social strategies are important because they strengthen institutions, encourage cooperation, and maintain social stability. For example, educational strategies help transmit social values, while community development programmes strengthen relationships among community members.
ii. Conflict Theory: Conflict theory, associated particularly with Karl Marx, explains society in terms of competition over resources, power, and opportunities. It emphasises the existence of inequalities between different social groups. From this perspective, social strategies should address unequal access to resources, discrimination, poverty, and other forms of social injustice. Examples include poverty reduction programmes, labour protection policies, and initiatives that promote equal opportunities.
iii. Social Learning Theory: Albert Bandura's social learning theory explains that individuals learn behaviours by observing and interacting with others. People may adopt behaviours by observing parents, teachers, friends, community leaders, and other role models. Social strategies based on this theory include mentorship, peer education, positive role modelling, and behavioural awareness campaigns. These approaches can encourage responsible behaviour and positive social interaction.
iv. Social Capital Theory: Social capital refers to the benefits individuals and communities obtain through relationships, networks, trust, and cooperation. Robert Putnam (2000) explains the importance of social networks and civic participation in building trust and strengthening communities. Social strategies that promote volunteering, community associations, teamwork, and public participation can strengthen social capital.

Importance of Social Strategies in Society

Social strategies contribute significantly to the development and stability of society.

i. Promotion of Social Unity: Social strategies encourage cooperation, mutual understanding, and respect among individuals from different backgrounds.
ii. Reduction of Social Problems: They help address issues such as poverty, unemployment, crime, discrimination, and inequality.
iii. Improvement of Communication: They encourage effective communication between individuals, organisations, and government institutions.
iv. Promotion of Education: Educational social strategies improve learning opportunities and encourage positive relationships among students and teachers.
v. Conflict Prevention and Management: They provide methods for resolving disagreements peacefully and preventing violence.
vi. Community Empowerment: Social strategies encourage community members to participate in decisions affecting their lives and development.
vii. Promotion of Equality and Inclusion: They help protect the rights of disadvantaged individuals and promote equal opportunities.
viii. Improvement of Public Health: Social awareness and community health programmes encourage healthy behaviour and improve access to healthcare information.
ix. Encouragement of Responsible Citizenship: They promote respect for laws, civic participation, accountability, and social responsibility.
x. Sustainable Development: Social strategies support long-term development by addressing social needs and improving the welfare of present and future generations.

Application of Social Strategies in Nigeria

Social strategies are highly relevant to Nigeria because of its cultural diversity, population size, and various developmental challenges. One important area of application is national integration. Nigeria consists of many ethnic groups, languages, and religious communities. Social strategies such as inter-ethnic dialogue, cultural exchange, civic education, and community cooperation can promote national unity. Another area is poverty reduction. Government agencies and non-governmental organisations use empowerment programmes, vocational training, financial support, and community development initiatives to improve people's living conditions. In education, social strategies such as scholarship programmes, mentorship, school counselling, and public awareness campaigns can help improve educational participation and reduce inequality. Social strategies are also used in conflict management. Dialogue, mediation, peace education, and community engagement can help reduce tensions and encourage peaceful relationships. Furthermore, public health campaigns promote awareness of sanitation, disease prevention, maternal health, vaccination, and healthy lifestyles. Therefore, social strategies can contribute significantly to national development when properly planned, funded, implemented, and monitored.

Challenges Facing the Implementation of Social Strategies

Despite their importance, social strategies face several challenges.

i. Inadequate Funding: Insufficient financial resources can prevent the effective implementation of social programmes.
ii. Poor Leadership: Weak leadership and poor decision-making can affect the success of social development initiatives.
iii. Corruption: Mismanagement and diversion of public resources can reduce the effectiveness of social programmes.
iv. Cultural and Religious Differences: Differences in beliefs and traditions may sometimes create difficulties in implementing certain social policies.
v. Lack of Public Participation: Some programmes fail because community members are not adequately involved in planning and implementation.
vi. Poverty and Unemployment: Economic hardship can make it difficult for individuals to participate in development activities.
vii. Inadequate Information: Lack of awareness about available social programmes may prevent people from benefiting from them.
viii. Political Instability: Changes in government policies and political disagreements can disrupt long-term social development programmes.
ix. Technological Inequality: Limited internet access and digital skills can prevent some communities from benefiting from digital social strategies.

Ways of Improving Social Strategies

The following measures can improve the planning and implementation of social strategies:

i. Increasing government and private-sector investment in social development.
ii. Encouraging community participation in decision-making.
iii. Promoting transparency and accountability.
iv. Strengthening educational and awareness programmes.
v. Supporting vulnerable and disadvantaged groups.
vi. Improving communication between government and citizens.
vii. Encouraging collaboration between public institutions and non-governmental organisations.
viii. Using technology to improve information sharing and public engagement.
ix. Providing adequate training for social development workers.
x. Regularly monitoring and evaluating social programmes.

Social Strategies and Sustainable Development

Social strategies are closely connected to sustainable development because development requires more than economic growth. It also involves improving human welfare, promoting equality, protecting human rights, and ensuring access to essential services.

The United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), adopted in 2015, provide an international framework for addressing major social, economic, and environmental challenges.

Social strategies contribute to several of these goals, particularly:
Goal 1: No Poverty.
Goal 3: Good Health and Well-being.
Goal 4: Quality Education.
Goal 5: Gender Equality.
Goal 10: Reduced Inequalities.
Goal 16: Peace, Justice and Strong Institutions.
Goal 17: Partnerships for the Goals.

By supporting these objectives, social strategies help create inclusive, peaceful, and sustainable communities.

Conclusion

In conclusion, social strategies are important tools for promoting positive social relationships, addressing societal challenges, and improving the general welfare of individuals and communities. They involve deliberate plans and actions designed to encourage cooperation, communication, inclusion, participation, and social development. The different types of social strategies, including communication strategies, community development strategies, conflict resolution strategies, educational strategies, social inclusion strategies, and social welfare strategies, contribute to the effective functioning of society. The theoretical perspectives of functionalism, conflict theory, social learning theory, and social capital theory also provide useful explanations of how social strategies influence human behaviour and social relationships. In Nigeria, social strategies are particularly important for addressing poverty, unemployment, insecurity, discrimination, educational inequality, and ethnic or religious tensions. However, challenges such as inadequate funding, corruption, poor leadership, and insufficient public participation must be addressed to ensure successful implementation. Governments, community leaders, educational institutions, private organisations, and individuals must work together to develop and implement effective social strategies. Ultimately, successful social strategies can promote peaceful coexistence, social justice, national unity, community empowerment, and sustainable development. They are therefore essential for building a fair, inclusive, stable, and progressive society.
